The International Accounting Standards Board (IAS) responded to the financial crisis by amending IAS 39. A study found by provides light to the issue of whether or not the amendment to IAS 39 benefit U.S. banks. The financial crisis of 2008 consists of unfair accounting practices, poor regulation, too much emphasis on credit scores and various other reasons. One popular reason includes subprime mortgages which leave mortgage-backed assets frozen on the books of U.S. banks. This leads to write-downs for the financial assets. The IASB initiates change to alleviate the financial crisis by amending the IAS 39. The IAS 39 allows for reclassification and measurements of financial instruments. Firms are allowed to abandon fair value measurement in order to alleviate the mortgage-backed assets effects. Some firms abuse IAS 39 and contribute it to the...
