S I : The working operations of the Baltimore and Ohio Rail Road during the year ending on the 30111 ult. , have been such in their extent and results, as to gratify the friends of the enterprise. The year under consideration having been the rst during which the entire length of the Road has been in operation, has been naturally looked upon as a year of experiment, and that too in more senses than one. With no certain or reliable data from which the amount of business and of revenue therefrom could be inferred, the community interested in the work, have eagerly watched the development of the actual state of things, and have seen their largest expectations more than realised in 111 actual experience of the year. The revenue of the several months of the year has been as follows: Statement of...
