CHAPTER VII THE COST OF LABOB The labor account presents a very different set of conditions from those governing the methods used in connection with the purchase of materials. Materials are weighed, measured, or counted, and paid for at thirty or sixty days, definite sums for definite quantity and quality. Labor is far more difficult to appraise as to either amount or grade. Payment for labor is practically spot cash on delivery, the factory assuming all risks of rejection of bad work by future purchasers, and relieving the workmen of responsibility for their own faulty performances. The human element enters very largely into the labor item. Specifications for materials are expected and followed; but regulations to govern labor are received with hostility and disregarded to whatever extent will be tolerated by the management. The necessary rigidity and exactness of accounting methods must be applied...

Reviews

Very beneficial to all of class of people. I am quite late in start reading this one, but better then never. You may like just how the writer create this publication.
